Chapter 11 - Juvenile Court

There is a high emotional involvement of the families of the juveniles appearing before the court, and especially because of the need for extremely close supervision of these juveniles--particularly of the older delinquent minors who may at any time require physical restraint or cause disturbances, the bailiffs assigned to the juvenile court must be acutely alert and responsive.